

Acknowledgments

This book would have not been possible without all sources of nourishment, human and nonhuman, that make my existence viable. I am especially grateful to the peoples and spirits of Abya Yala in general and Turtle Island in particular for allowing me to dwell, dream, love, think, and write on their sacred land.

Thanks to all participants in the 2014 Summer School on Socially Sustainable Degrowth, Universitat Autònoma de Barcelona, and Research & Degrowth Barcelona for all our inspiring discussions.

Special thanks go to Kata Beilin for all our fruitful collaborations and conversations on Iberian ecocriticism and environmental humanities over the last five years as well as for her generous feedback on the book manuscript. Thanks to Luis Moreno-Caballud for his thoughtful comments. The suggestions made by Kata and Luis helped me improve the quality and readability of the book. My gratitude also to Megan Saltzman and Jordi Marí for their encouraging comments on chapters 3 and 4 respectively.

Thanks to all the audiences, friends, students, and scholars who, during the last few years, critically engaged with some of the ideas developed in this book, offered feedback, and posed thoughtful questions at Miami University, Universität Zürich (ETH), Freie Universität Berlin, University of Kentucky, Universidad de Cádiz, University of California at Berkeley, University of Calabria, Balbacil (otro mundo), Harvard University, Universidade de Lisboa, and Alcalá de Henares. The multiple conversations about indigenous cosmopolitics and post-development with my friend Leonardo Figueroa Helland have always been enlightening.

My gratitude goes to Miami University in general for facilitating the development of this book through a period of research leave and, in particular, to the Department of Spanish & Portuguese for its constant support and the Luxembourg John E. Dolibois European Center for hosting me. I am especially grateful to the Humanities Center at Miami University for being a crucial part of my intellectual nourishment within the Miami community.

Thanks to all involved with ALCESXXI for being a hopeful catalyst for transformation and to Susan Larson, Palmar Álvarez Blanco, Germán

Labrador Méndez, Ellen Mayock, Steven Torres, Daniel Áres López, John Trevathan, Ben Fraser, Joseba Gabilondo, and many others for pushing our field into critical and inspiring directions. Thanks to the ASLE community (Carmen Flys Junquera, José Manuel Marrero Henríquez, Roberto Forns, Mark Anderson, Jorge Marcone, Serenella Iovino, Juan Carlos Galeano, etc.) for so many interesting conversations.

Thanks to my friend Alan Davison for editing and beautifying the language of the first draft and to Gene McGarry for his professional copy-editing of subsequent versions.

I am grateful to Chloé Johnson for being such a helpful commissioning editor and to Liverpool University Press for believing in this project.

I gratefully acknowledge permission to reprint revised or excerpted versions of the following two essays in Chapter 1: ‘Degrowth and Ecological Economics in 21st Century Spain: Toward a Posthumanist Economy’, from Ethics of Life: Contemporary Iberian Debates, edited by Kata Beilin and William Viestenz, Hispanic Issues 42 (Nashville: Vanderbilt University Press, 2016): 143–159, and ‘Toward a Euro-Mediterranean Socioenvironmental Perspective: The Case for a Spanish Ecocriticism’, from ‘Mediterranean Ecocriticism’, edited by Serenella Iovino, special issue, Ecozon@: European Journal of Literature, Culture and Environment 4, no. 2 (Autumn 2013): 30–48. Some ideas elaborated in Postgrowth Imaginaries will appear, in a seminal stage, in ALCESXXI. Journal of Contemporary Spanish Literature & Film no. 3 (2016–2017). I am deeply grateful for the generous permission to reprint the following images or texts free of charge in Chapter 3: thanks to Antonio Luque for allowing me to reproduce the lyrics of ‘Vacaciones en el mar’ by Sr. Chinarro in Presidente (Mushroom Pillow MP114, 2011); and to ECOALF for permission to reproduce the text ‘manifesto tras(h)umanity’ from their website. Thanks to Miguel Brieva for granting me permission to reproduce the illustration ‘Somos felices porque protegemos lo nuestro’, which appeared first in Dinero: Revista de Poética Financiera e Intercambio Espiritual (Barcelona: Random House Mondadori, 2008). Thanks to Basurama for permission to reproduce the picture of Rus Santo Domingo, Tsunami de Basurama (basurama.org CCBY-NC-SA 4.0). Thanks to José Palazón Osma for permission to reproduce the picture ‘Paisajes de desolación’. Thanks to Manel Fontdevila for granting me permission to reproduce his illustration ‘Llueven refugiados’, which appeared in eldiario.es on November 15, 2015. Special thanks to Mónica from Basurama, Manel Fontdevila, José Palazón, and Miguel Brieva for sharing with me high-resolution versions of the images.

Finally, thanks to my parents and sisters, and to all my friends everywhere who had to listen to multiple iterations of some of the ideas included in this book during the last few years. Special thanks to Bubu and Luann for everything and to all my community in Oxford for making my daily life colorful and fun.
