My interest in Mauritian literature was first prompted by a serendipitous meeting with Kumari Issur and Vinesh Hookomsingh at an ASCALF (later the Society for Francophone Postcolonial Studies) conference in 2001, and by the stimulating conversations I had with them there and since. Since then, I have been welcomed into the diverse but unified community of Indian Ocean scholars on research trips, conferences and workshops in the United Kingdom, Mauritius, Réunion, France, Belgium and the United States. I am grateful for their network of common interests, support and friendship.

I should like to thank the Arts and Humanities Research Council for awarding me a Research Fellowship in 2012–13, which gave me the precious time needed to write a first draft of this book. I am grateful for their patience since then, as I have juggled the many demands of being head of department with the challenges of bringing the book to completion. Thanks also to my colleagues in the Department of Modern Languages and European Studies, and the School of Literature and Languages at the University of Reading, for their unfailing support during this process.

During the book's genesis, I benefited from the invaluable input and inspiration, direct and indirect, of more people than I can acknowledge here. My thanks go to: Patrick Allen, Véronique Bragard, Mohit Chandna, Amaleena Damlé, Alison Donnell, Nicki Hitchcott, Vinesh Hookomsingh, Kumari Issur, Bruno Jean-François, Françoise Lionnet, Eileen Lokha, Valérie Magdelaine-Andrianjafitrimo, Maeve McCusker, Siobhan McIlvanney, Lorna Milne, Judith Misrahi-Barack, Gillian Nichellaigh, Yolaine Parisot, Barlen Pyamootoo and Srilata Ravi. My sincerest thanks go to Jano Couacaud for kindly allowing me to reproduce his beautiful photograph on the front cover of this book.

I should like to thank the series editor, Charles Forsdick, for his unstinting support of this project – and Anthony Cond, Chloe Johnson, the anonymous readers and the editorial team at Liverpool University Press, for their meticulous suggestions and useful comments.

Thanks, as always, to Paul, for his patience and sense of perspective; to my children, Judith and Patrick, for putting up with my absences; and to both sets of grandparents – Una and Colin Waters, Kathie and Mick Hamilton – without whose regular childcare this book would not have been possible.
